CURIOS RESERVOIRS.*The Use to Which Baobab Trees Are Put in Africa.

People of the Kordofan province Africa, use baobab trees as reservoirs for the scanty water of that district. The trees have to be prepared carefully for this use. The large branches are first cut off near the trunk. If this is not done the trunk is apt to split as soon as it is hollowed out. A hole is cut in the trunk, generally just above a branch, which serves as a platform for the man who is filling the tree, and the interior is hollowed out. Round the bottom of the tree a shallow basin some twenty or thirty feet in diameter is made, in which the rainwater collects. As soon as there is a storm the people go out and fill their trees. The water so stored remains perfectly good until the end of the next hot weather or even longer. A few trees, naturally hollow, have a hole at the top between the branches and fill themselves, the branches catching the water and acting as gutters. These are called "island" and are highly valued.

The system gives a cistern twenty feet high and from eight to ten feet or even more in diameter. Owing to the labor involved in preparing and filling the trees water is usually bought and sold, and on the main roads where there is much traffic, as between Nejed and Jebel al-Hilla on the way to El Fasher, the capital of Darfur, the people do a regular trade by supplying merchants and travelers with water.

The bucket, called a "dilwa," consists of a piece of leather suspended by strings six inches long, from a piece of wood bent in a circle to which the rope used for drawing the water is fastened by three or four strings. On reaching the bottom of the well the leather opens out and collects the water, however little there may be.—Chicago News.

The Old Drunk's Advice to His Drunken Young Pupil.

"All this easy talk about 'honest graft,'" said an author, "makes me tired. There isn't any such thing. 'Honest' graft is as a par with the point of view of an incorrigible old crook I ran across when I was doing police work on a Chicago paper years ago. The venerable scoundrel had a son about eighteen years old, whom he had carefully trained to follow in his own footsteps. They lived together, and every night the old man used to make the boy fork over the proceeds of the day's pocket-picking, al lowing him just enough to live on.

"Finally the young crook began to rebel inwardly, and one night, after a particularly good day's haul, he secretly pawned a diamond scuffin and kept the money himself. He gave the old thief the rest of the swag, how ever, and it was so godly a pile that he opened his heart and bared the astonished boy $5 and told him to go to a principal or somewhere and enjoy himself. So the boy began to put on his only gold rings. But he seemed strangely silent and disengaged. The old man noticed it and demanded to know what was the matter and if the boy wasn't enough, and so on.

"Sufficient the old burst into tears. 'Gosh,' he sighed. 'I ain't no right to this fine spot. Here's $5 I got on a sit today, and I was goin' to hold it out on you.'

"The old crook took the money and stared with sadness upon his 'child Son.' he said, 'I want to tell you one thing. Take it from me, folks that gets money that way will never, never come to no good.'" —New York World.

"I have a world of confidence in Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for I have used it with perfect success," writes Mrs. M. L. French, Philadelphia, Md. Sold by all dealers.

Treat For Blisters.

Here is a test for blisters so simple that any housewife can put it into successful practice. A clean piece of white paper is smeared with a little of the suspected blister. The paper is then rolled up and set on fire. If the blister is pure the smell of the burnt paper is rather pleasant, but the odor is distinctly malady if the "blister" is made up wholly or in part of animal fat.—Chicago News.

Can You Hear It?

"I'm afraid, Tom, dear, you will find me a mite of trouble," she said. "It still be the sweetest labor of my life to correct them. She fancies up—indeed, you don't!" Boston Transcript.

Poisonous.

Poisonous is more prevalent than viruses, and many things which cannot be overcome when they are together yield themselves up when taken little by little.

Diarrhea is always more or less prevalent during September. Be prepared for it. Chamberlain's Cough, Cough and Diarrhea Remedy is always unaffected. It is a powerful agent and is guaranteed to take care of all diarrhea.
